Section 5 - Possible Forest Products Re-Development Real Estate Sites

Introduction

The goal of Phase I of the NEFA Wood Markets & Retention project is to provide the background information to understand the timber resources, forest products infrastructure and supply chain, and best target forest products groups for retention and development for the New Hampshire, New York and Vermont region. This is the fifth report in this series funded by the US Department of Commerce Economic Development Agency through the Northern Forest Center's Future Forest Economy Initiative.

Report 1 of the series covered the timber resources and forest products industry supply chain for the three-state region. Report 2 focused on the regional attributes of the three states that make it unique and to determine where its strengths and weaknesses lie. Reports 3 & 4 – packaged together – reviewed the work of the FOR/Maine project and the differences between the New Hampshire, New York and Vermont region to Maine. This report also narrowed down the best possible future forest products that might provide opportunity for growth in the region and benchmarked this region and those products with other similar states to further understand where the three-state region's strengths and weaknesses are.

Most of this work has focused on primary processing manufacturing of forest products, i.e., a sawmill or wood pellet mill but not a furniture manufacturing plant. In a few instances, such as with mass timber, we have looked at secondary products. But the focus is on opportunities for new or expanding primary processing forest products facilities for the region.

Possible Forest Products Development & Re-Development Real Estate Sites

This fifth report in the series seeks to identify potential industrial sites where new primary processing forest products manufacturing might occur. It involved researching available industrial real estate in the region as well as a review of possible old forest products mill sites that may have, at one time, housed a forest products mill, but no longer does today. Additionally, we have also constructed a database of the existing primary processing forest products mill sites – sites being used today – because each of those sites represent possible expansion of production for forest products.

Old Mill Sites

Later in this report we review current for-sale industrial development sites in the New Hampshire, New York and Vermont region. Before we review those sites we felt it important to take an historical look at primary mill sites – mostly sawmill – in the region that may have been operational in the 1990s but are no longer being used as mill sites or at least do not have operating mills at this time. Since the 1990s, many sawmills and other primary processor mills have closed operations. These tend to be the smaller mill operations.

In order to undertake this analysis, we researched directories/lists of primary forest products mill sites. Using up-to-date lists from today's inventory of operating primary forest products mills, we then determined which mill sites that had been in operation in the three-states in the 1990s that are no longer in operation today.

To analyze the sites no longer in operation, we used Google Earth to locate the mill site and make a determination about current use and possibility for re-use and development for a forest products mill operation. We were not always successful in this analysis in locating the defunct mill site that had been operating in the 1990s and not in operation today – but we were able to find a number of the old mill sites and make a determination.

The result of this analysis can be seen in Figure 1 map which represents the full listing of sites that were operating in the 1990s but no longer operate today. The actual list is found in Appendix 1.

Source: NH Division of Forests & Lands, VT Department of Forests, Parks & Recreation, NY Division of Lands and Forests, Innovative Natural Resource Solutions LLC

After conducting our analysis with Google Earth, we concluded definitively that a small number of these old mill sites may still be in a condition that could offer the possibility of another forest products manufacturing facility. This analysis did not determine whether these sites are available for sale as that was outside the scope of this effort.

Currently Available Industrial Real Estate

Finding currently available real estate that is zoned for industrial use in the three-state area and suitable for forest products manufacturing is not a simple matter. Some state governments maintain a list of commercial real estate sites for sale, but they are not always complete and not necessarily up to date. In the New Hampshire, New York and Vermont region, the State of New Hampshire does not maintain a list while Vermont maintains a reasonable list and New York only has a dataset of real estate sites that they pre-approve for the Build It Now program. Build It Now are sites that have been reviewed by the Empire Development (state agency) and some on the list have already been permitted for certain uses. There are many other industrial sites in New York that are not on the Build It Now list.

To add to the partial lists from New York and Vermont and to get any dataset for New Hampshire, commercial real estate listings were reviewed. These are found on many sites and through hundreds of real estate brokers.

Our investigations into all of these sources – screening the existing industrial buildings and/or raw land for sale zoned for industrial use - yielded the sites represented by the map in Figure 3. The data for this map can be found in Appendix 2. Note: all the data found in the Appendix are available as Excel files.

From this researched database, New Hampshire has 41 sites, New York has 37 sites and Vermont has 35 sites. A reminder that given the sources of these data, they should be considered a snapshot in time – January, 2021. Depending when the reader accesses this report, the individual sites may still be available for sale or they might already have been sold. Another possibility is that a site might be taken off the market for one of many reasons.

The intent of developing these data along with the old mill site data and the existing mill site data that follows this section is to show that many potential industrial sites are available for new forest products manufacturing. These lists may provide a good starting point for a potential developer to begin a search for a suitable industrial site. We encourage any developer to also contact the state's economic development agencies at the same time the lists contained in this report are reviewed.

Co-Location sites

Sites where existing primary forest products manufacturing occurs today can be found in the Appendix 3 and the Figure 4 map. The map includes all primary wood-using mills in the region – including biomass plants in the three states and the two pulp mills in New York. All together among the three states, there are 284 existing mill sites where primary forest products manufacturing occurs today (in 2021).

A large part of any effort to encourage new forest products markets in the region needs to be focused on expanding existing markets. The way to do that is to work with those operating forest products manufacturing facilities to see what they need to expand their operations – either through adding shifts or capacity or through co-locating symbiotic businesses on site to take advantage of the products produced that might be used as feedstock for another manufacturing facility or for use of wood residues for energy – or both.

The data compiled in this report should be helpful to start those discussions.

Conclusion

This is the fifth in a series of reports that, together, should provide the basis and background data and information for serious economic development work to encourage expansion of existing primary forest products manufacturing in the New Hampshire, New York and Vermont region as well new primary forest products manufacturing.

Report 1 of the series covered the timber resources and forest products industry supply chain for the three-state region while report 2 focused on the regional attributes of these states that make them unique and to determine where their strengths and weaknesses lie. Reports 3 & 4 – packaged together – reviewed the work of the FOR/Maine project and the differences between the New Hampshire, New York and Vermont region to Maine. This report also narrowed down the best possible future forest products that might provide opportunity for growth in the region and benchmarked this region and those products with other similar states to further understand where the three-state region's strengths and weaknesses are.

This fifth report is primarily a series of data-lists that allow the reader to better understand the possible industrial real estate sites that might be available in the three-state region for primary forest products manufacturing. It shows that hundreds of sites across the entire three-state geography are either for sale today as industrial sites that might be suitable for a developer or investor to use to create a new forest products manufacturing facility. Further, understanding where the existing, currently operating primary forest products manufacturing facilities are located – the last section of this report – give a good snapshot of what should be a priority effort to seek out expansion at existing forest products facilities.

We conclude that suitable real estate sites are available for primary forest products manufacturing facilities in the three states and this should not be a limiting factor in an economic development effort that seeks to expand existing primary forest products manufacturing and encouraging new manufacturing.
